FOR LITTLE PEOPLE.

A SAD PREDICAMENT.

I wonder if you ever thought How hard it is on me To be the fellow that I am-The middle one of three? I never have a single right, I just belong nowhere; I got put into the wrong place. And no one seems to care.

There's John; why, every meal, you know, He's always helped the first; And if we have two pairs of things Of course I get the worst. Whenever a big show comes to town

They always let John go; But as for me, they're sure to say, "John's older, Sam, you know.

Ted breaks my toys and tears my books; If we go out to slide, I always have to be the horse And Ted the one to ride. Then if I dare to say a word, Ma's face gets awful blue, She looks at me so sad, and says: "Ted's younger, dear, than you."

I'd rather never be at all: It isn't any fun, Unless you are the oldest boy, Or else the youngest one John's "older." and Ted's "not so old," And worse than all, you see,

I'm never going to get my turn. For they will always be. -Carrie B. Chandler, in Wide Awake.

"OLD WOBBLE."

The Curious Present Uncle Fred Brought the Children When He Came Home

For two whole years Uncle Fred, who was a captain in the navy, had been away with his ship, and had sailed hundreds and hundreds of miles. Now he was home once more, and had brought something for his little nephews and nieces, whom he never forgot.

"And what do you suppose I have?" asked Uncle Fred, turning to Hal and Dick and Mary and Kit, who stood around his chair.

"A doll," cried Mary clapping her hands. "A real French doll that says 'mamma' and 'papa.'"

"Pooh!" said Dick. "Men don't buy dolls, do they, Uncle Fred?" "Not often," replied their uncle, laughing; "and this time it is not a doll. Now everyone may guess once." "Is it alive?" asked Hal, very much

"Yes," answered Uncle Fred; "that was a good guess; it is something alive."

The children clapped their hands and shouted for joy. "A monkey," cried Dick. "Yes, a monkey," said Hal, who thought that a pet monkey would be the finest thing in the world. "A parrot," gussed Mary, but Kit could not think of any thing to say. "Well, what do you think it is?" asked Uncle Fred, turning to Kit.

"I don't know," answered the little girl, "unless-unless it is a baby elephant."

Uncle Fred laughed at this, but shook his head. "No, no," he said, "you are all wrong. Come out in the garden now

So Hal and Dick and Mary and Kit followed Uncle Fred into the garden, where he opened a big box, and took out the funniest-looking thing ever seen. You could not tell exactly whether it was meant for a bird or not. Uncle Fred set it on the ground, and it walked around as though it had been used to the place all its life.

"Oh, what is it? what is it?" came the anxicas chorus, as the children gathered around to view the new pet. "It is a fowl," explained Uncle Fred,

"that is called a penguin." "Dear me," said Mary, watching it from a distance, "isn't it queer? Hasn't it got funny wings? Won't they grow any more?" "No," replied Uncle Fred. "It is a bird that never flies, but lives in the water most of the time. A sailor caught this for me on an island in the Pacific ocean. We kept it on board the ship, and it is quite tame now." "What did you call it?" asked Mary, who was very much interested in the strange creature. "A penguin," said Uncle Fred.

"I don't like that for a name," Kit said, slowly: "it is too hard. Look at him wobble when he walks. Zackly like a littleboby that has just learned. "That's a good idea, Kit," returned Uncle Fred. "Why don't you call him Old Wobble?"

"Yes," shouted the children, "we'll name him that. Hello, Old Wobble!" But the penguin did not seem to know his new name, and walked down This stable, which is run n connection with the well-known Myers House, has been supplied with to his owners.

All that day Old Wobble kept the children amused. He was such a curious and solemn fowl, so different from runnwer's Supplies and is better than ever all other kinds. He walked into the chicken-vard, and seared the that they ran away cackling. Then he went swimming in the little pond, where there were lots of ducks. But the ducks did not know what to make of him, so before long Old Wobble had the whole pond to himself, which he seemed to enjoy very much. None of the ducks or chickens seemed anxious to make friends with him, but Old Wobble didn't seem to care. per. AUNT NAN'S SCARE.

How Midget and Betsy Produced a Real Seasation at Grandina's House.

"Gamma, O gamma, can't I go up in the akkit to play? Can't I please, gamma?" and the sweet little face looked up into grandma's, fairly quivering with eagerness.

Grandma bent down, and taking the soft, rosy cheeks between her two hands, pressed a loving kiss on the little mouth. "Can't I go, gamma?" the pleading voice repeated; but grandma hesitated. "Why are you so afraid to have her play in the attic, mother?" said Auntie Nan. "She is a careful little girl, and she enjoys it so much. Do let her go!"

"Well, darling," said grandma, slowly, "you may; but wait a moment," as Midget started to fly off.

"You won't play at the head of the stairs?"

"No, gamma." "Nor lean out the window?" The yellow curls shook vigorously. "Nor get into any of the trunks?"

"No, no, gamma!" and the curls shook harder than ever. "I'll 'member it all-every single bit. Come on, dolly; ganima says we can go up to the akkit," and seizing her favorite Betsey, Midget rushed away. "She thinks more of that old doll than 'any of the rest," laughed Aunt Nan, looking at the row of handsome, finely-dressed dollies seated primly on the sofa. "It used to be my favorite, too; but I didn't have such as these to compare it with."

"It would have made no difference if you had," said grandama. "Children can take more solid comfort with an every-day sort of a doll like that than with any of the fine ones.

"What a comfort Midget is!" said auntie, lovingly. "I wish Sarah would let us have her all the time, though I don't see how she can spare her an hour."

"She is staying up there a long time," said grandma, after awhile. "I believe I'll just go up and see what she is "Now, mother," Aunt Nan replied, "what is the use of your tiring yourself in that way? Midget is all right; she always does as she promises. I'm going to get supper now; then I'll call her," and the brisk young auntie bustled out into the kitchen, and soon was at the foot of the attic stairs calling merrily: "Anybody up there that wants raspberry shortcake for supper?" There was no response, so saying: 'She must be asleep," auntie ran lightly up-stairs and looked all around.

No Midget was to be seen, so she began calling, but suddenly stopped and sank to the floor with both hands over her face.

There in a corner, she suddenly saw peeping from beneath the lid of an old trunk, was a bit of Midget's little pink Only a moment Aunt Nan sat thus, then nerving herself, she quickly rose and grasped the lid, faint and sick, but thinking: "It may have been very long." The trunk opened, and then she sank on the floor again, laughing and crying ing: "I could almost shake Midget herself for giving me such a fright.' Just as she was beginning to hunt for her small niece again, she heard grandma calling at the foot of the stairs: "Are you up there looking for Midget? You may as well stop. See here." So with Betsy still in her arms, Aunt Nan ran down and followed grandma to her own room. There in the middle of the bed was midget, fast asleep.

Her rosy little face was half-hidden in the depths of an old frilled muslin cap, not so very unlike her own dainty bonnet.

A white crape shawl was wrapped around her, and a black silk skirt completed her costnine. "To think," exclaimed grandma, "of her coming down-stairs in that dress! What if she had tripped on it! That was something I didn't think of." Aunt Nan was laughing at the funny little figure; and soon Midget's eyes began to open, falling first of all on the doll which auntie was holding absentmindedly under her arm, head downward. "O Auntie Nan," Midget eried, in tones of distress; "you're holding Betsey so the blood'll all run into her head. Don't, don't! Give her to me.'

Aunt Nan hastily restored the doll to a proper position, then laid her in the little mother's arms, where she was hugged tenderly.

"Didn't her have a nice bed, Auntie Nan?" said Midget. "What made you wake her up for?

Then Aunt Nan told her story Grandma was shocked and felt very sorry for her, but Midget said, a little severely: "I telled gramma I wouldn't get in the trunk, didn't I? So course it wasn't me. The little darling rests against a piilow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisitereproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x2) inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

A Dress That Will Appear at the Coming Patriarchs' Ball - Pearl Ornamentation-Black and Purple the Favorites-Some New Gowns.

Well, we've about grown tired of being sensible. We did give up some of our eccentricities of last winter, and tried real hard all summer to be content. We lingeringly discarded the ridiculously long waist line and alarmingly high shoulder puff, the combination of which made us look so queer in

We even renounced at the beginning of this season the trains which swept so majestically over our streets and added such dignity to our appearance-so long as they were clean. This last sacrifice was so great that we doubling the length of our house trains. This was soothing and inspiring likewise. It incited us to further action. We suddenly decided that the summer girl had been too modest, too unassum. in length, are plaited in very large ing in her robing. No wonder the male sex had failed to pay sufficient attention. She had been simply pretty and sweet, with her ruffles, her ribbons and laces. But that had not been enough. The winter girl must be magnificent, startling, gorgeous, unique-a thing apart-a different being from the girl of any other season. How to accom-

And the results of her cogitations we see before us-that wonderful commingling of so many styles, and periods and reigns. The immense panniers, the long, sweeping, flat trains, the flaring skirt, the low bodice, the high waist, the queer hour-glass sleeves, and the magnificence of these when appearing in rich velvet pile and priceless old lace, all proclaim that the winter girl may wear the laurel with a consciousness of

On the evening gown, of course, she has bestowed her most careful thought, for it is in the evening that she expects to score her greatest triumphs. She has planned one, for instance, for that great event of the season, the Patriarchs' ball, and it will be a success. For its material is a delicate green satin, to be generously ornamented with American beauties. The dress of princess cut will fasten invisibly at the left, and will be closely covered at the foot with the deep-hearted roses, put on in points. Over the closely-fitting, plain satin gown will fall a rich tunie of beautiful lace, plaited on the low-cut bodice, back and front, with an ample heading above. Then the tunic will fall perfectly loose to the feet, standing apart altogether at the left side, and with the lace edges forming pretty cascades as they fall. Across the bodice there will be a single row of roses, and another row around each of the sleeves, which will be short-large puffs of green velvet. Her feet will be shod in pink, her gloves will match the satin gown, the plumes in her bair will be like the

was made of a fine black velvet pile on a vari-colored ground, which showed through in a puzzling way, so that you couldn't quite make up your mind about it. About two-thirds down the skirt were two bands of lace, laid head to head, and separated by a number of tiny black velvet bands. A plastron of finely-gathered silk was joined to the bodice by a roll of the same, and a band of white passementerie ran over the left shoulder. On the other was an epaulet of much wider passementerie, which also formed the ceinture and the collar. The sleeves of black gauze were absolutely flat at the shoulder, falling in a loose puff to the elbow, and edged with a deep lace flounce.

Eminence purple-how much we see of it everywhere. It has even crept into the fine mesh with which we shield our complexions. Let me see-purple used to be second mourning, didn't it? But if all the dames that we see these days clad in the color are mourning departed friends, there is an innumerable host of them. In fact, pretty nearly every one is robed in black or purple. Both colors are extremely popular, and will be all winter.

A most striking dress of purple cloth has a flaring skirt edged with black fox: has fancy black braid hiding each skirt seam; has a short empire bodice, with a plain belt of pale yellow; has a queer kind of overpiece in yellow on the bodice, that is almost indescribable.

It forms first a standing collar and a sort of loose yoke, that falls on the shoulders in pretty curves. But instead of being contented as a yoke, it must needs run down back and front in a long, straight piece, even several inches below the belt. Where it passes the belt in front, a big gold buckle holds the two together. All around the edge of the yellow is a design in black embroidery. The lady wears a lovely purple veil with it.

So many dresses of last year are freshened with three short capes, generally trimmed with fur, and the longest of them just covering the shoulders. On the new gowns, too, these little pelerines figure conspicuously. Some very pretty brocade ones, of a single cape only, can be had for evening wear. They are generally only a few inches folds, and edged with fur or feather trimming. Perhaps they are still more dressy in velvet. EVA A. SCHUBERT.

Yankees of the South.

"The Chilians are the Yankees of South America," said Victor P. Hart. now at the Lindell, after several years spent south of the line, "They are alert, progressive, ingenious and give the almighty dollar as hot a chase as any people on earth. The women are remarkably beautiful, and the men as fine a lot of fellows as can be found on the earth. They are, for the most part, tall, broad shouldered, supple as Hindoos and as brave as lions. It is peculiarly fortunate that the United States did not become embroiled in a war with Chili. Of course, such a contest could have had but one result; but it would not have been the walk-over the people of this country supposed. The Chilians are not only a brave and warlike people, but their mountainous country offers every advantage for defense. It is full of Thermopylean passes, where a handful of men could hold a mighty army at bay. It offers abundant sites for fortifications as impregnable as Gibraltar or Quebec. All this talk about the Chilians disliking the Americans is the veriest nonsense. They regard the and the Americans as the greatest people on earth. We should cultivate the Chilians. They are a deserving people, and the glory of South America depends chiefly upon them."-St. Louis Globe-

Considering that their good offices have had no effect on the statesmen, it seems to have been money wasted, but the people will forgive the outlay and thankthe men of God, if by a united effort at divine imploration, they bring about a quick and final adjournment of the body which has done nothing to show for the amount of money that has been expended on it or that which is to be expended. The prayers of the righteous availeth much and if the preachers will make a strong pull, a long pull and a pull together, they may thereby remove the mountain of imbecility from the capital

An effort is being made to have another cabinet officer added to the quota, already too great--that of Secretary of Roads. We have received blanks to get signatures to a petition to Congress asking for the establishment of such an office, but we are not in that line. The country does not need such a figurehead. We would much prefer to see the office of Secretary of Agriculture abolished than to see the new one established, even if our friend Logan, of the Times, is booked for the former sine-

A LADY, who wanted some white paper from which to cut paterns, came into this office recently and asked if we could sell her some blank INTERIOR JOURNALS. FRIDAY.

In the Harris building at Crab Orchard I will open a third store, which will be given up entirely to the display of Christmas and Holday Goods and from that day until Christmas Eve, I will have on exhibition

TREMENDOUS TURKEY GOBBLER.

Guess Tickets will be given with every article sold, and every purchaser of an article in either of the three stores will be entitled to guess at its weight. On Christmas Eve at 3 o'clock P. M., the Guess Tickets will be examined and the Turkey weighed and the persona guessing nearest to its exact weight will be presented with FIVE BIG SILVER DOLLARS for a Christmas Gift, and also with the Turkey Gobler for his Christmas Dinner. At the same time the Crayon Portraits will be delivered to my customers and I will continue to furnish them to all purchasers of $10's worth of goods, they paying only the cost of frames, $2.75.

I am just back from purchasing my stock of Christmas Goods, which makes the fourth full stock of goods I have bought this Fall and Winter and all three of my houses are now stacked and piled with new and desirable goods. During the Holiday Trade I will have ten clerks to wait upon my customers. STORE NO. 1 contains Dry Goods, Groceries, Notions and general stock department with 5 clerks to wait upon you and is filled with everything you can possibly desire in this line. STORE NO. 2 is the hall above and is reached by a broad stairway. This has been nicely fitted up for a Clothing and Gents' Furnishing Goods department and contains Boy's and Men's Clothing, Overcoats, Hats, Caps, Boots, Shoes, Shirts, Drawers, Socks and Underwear, and in fact everything pertaining to this department. If you fail to visit this room you will miss seeing half of my stock.

P. S.-I wish to say to the patrons of my Summer Resort that while I have been so busily engaged in the Mercantile business during the present, I have not neglected or forgotten Green Briar Springs, but have had men there constantly at work since the close of season, and have added many improvements, including a large Amusement Hall, in back yard, 60 ft. front by 100 ft. deep, containing an elegant Ball Room, from which the dance can be observed from the rear verandahs and from every room in the Hotel building by those who do not care to visit the Ball Room. I have also erected a nice Bowling Allley in rear yard. I shall make a scale of prices ranging from $5 to $8 per week for next season, according to location and furnishings of rooms. If you want to have a happy time, make your arrangements to visit Green Briar next summer. D. G. SLAUGHTER. Respectfully.

CHAPTER I. THE SPIDER AND THE FLIES.

Accordingly the four men drew their

On a certain evening in the spring of be more precise, but for various reasons that particular club for no other reason old? than that it was celebrated for the exthat incongruity is more amusing, he never chose his guests with any regard his shoulders and replied: to the question of whether they were likely to suit each other or not. Assurent occasion could have little in common, unless it might be an appreciation of good cooking and good wine.

First there was his old friend and former schoolfellow, Percy Thorold, a handsome, square faced, dark haired and rather serious looking man of a little over 30, who had entered parliament at an early age, had soon won distinction as a debater, and was now a junior ple were inclined to think, hopelessly good for nothing young fellow, Eustace Moreton. Moreton had been in the Guards for a time; but had resigned his commission, averring that he could not stand the expense.

Socially he was much in request, for he was a good dancer, did not object to was known by his host or by anybody else, except that he had a great deal of money, that he was to be seen driving four-in-hand in the park and elsewhere, that his late father had been a German banker, and that he was very anxious to gain a firm foothold in society.

Of the four Lord Guise himself was the eldest and by far the least smart in appearance. His hair, which he wore rather longer than is the custom in these days, was not very carefully brushed; he had a short, reddish beard; his clothes fitted him loosely; his features were large and irregular. Altogether he was a common place looking person, although. as he was the eldest son of a duke, many people had been able to discover in him an air of distinction. He passed for being eccentric; but this, perhaps, only meant that his manners were not as he was still unmarried.

That Lord Guise remained a bachelor, notwithstanding the many seductive and more or less direct invitations which he had received to change his condition, was due not in the least to eccentricity, but to his profound conviction that when a man binds himself for life to any woman the chances are at least ten to one that that man will sooner or later rue an act of irreparable folly. He was fond of saying this, and he was saying it now to his three guests, who listened to him with a good deal of interest and attention.

"Marriage as an institution is a neces sity, of course," he observed, in his slow, slightly drawling accents; "nobody would think of disputing that. What I protest against is the English system of arranging marriages. What the deuce man such a consummate ass as to believe humbugs." woman all his life long?"

"I can imagine a man being ass enough for that," Thorold said, with a slight smile. "Well, on second thoughts, so can I. In point of fact that is just what one does imagine each time that one falls in love. I put it wrongly; what I ought to have said was that no man can be such an ass as to believe in the perpetual duration of another man's love."

"Or of a woman's love," added Moreton sighing, and gazing sentimentally into his empty champagne glass.

Lord Guise made a sign to the waiter, and resumed his homily. "The reason why so many married people hate each other is that they have started with an absurd promise to perform impossibilities. One should begin as one means to go on, and if they were tained.

Do you agree with me?" In truth his harangue, though ostensibly general in its scope, had been intended to apply specially to an individual case: and this intention was no secret to Mr. Thorold, who answered:

"Oh, I dare say you are right. Per sonally, I shouldn't much care to marr upon the French plan; but very likely it works better than ours in the majority of instances. However, it doesn't great ly signify whether you are right or wrong, because you will hardly bring about a revolution in the national

"I don't know that," said Lord Guise. "Every movement must be started by somebody, and humble as I am I may be the first to set the ball rolling in the right direction. Not that I should advocate the adoption of the French system without reserve; the mother-in-law is too prominent a personage in French households for my taste. "Well, no, he could hardly expect me, not sure that it would be legal. My idea would be that each member of the society should bind himself to be guided by the instructions of his friends for a certain length of time-say six months. Of course, they might sanction his marriage at once; but if they saw that he was about to commit moral suicide they would tell him that he mustn't see or speak to the lady for another half year. When that time was up he would be free to dash his head against a brick wall if he chose, but the chances are that the interval afforded him for sober reflection would be sufficient. Why shouldn't we four make a start here and now? We seem to be pretty well agreed, and we're none of us in love at present, are we?" "Not more than usual," answered

Moreton, speaking for himself. "Not the least bit in the world," answered Mr. Schneider complacently. Thorold, after a brief pause, said: "I believe I may swell the chorus. Everybody knows that I was engaged to my cousin, Lady Belvoir, a short time ago, and that I am not engaged to her now. As the affair was broken off by mutual consent, it may be assumed that there is no longer any love lost between us."

"I'm glad you mentioned that. Thorold," observed Lord Guise, leaning back in his chair and blowing a cloud of smoke toward the cold g. "I didn't like to cite your case whout your permission, though it's very much in point.' "I have no objection to your citing it;

but is it in point?"

"Well-isn't it? A more fortunate escape I never heard of. Heaven forbid that I should call Sybil Belvoir a suitable wife for any man, but of all men in the world I can't imagine one less suit-

"It isn't a practical joke at all; it's practical carnest, and I have Already explained my object," answered Lord Guise. "In case of necessity we are to have the power of insuring each other a breathing space of six months, that's all. Now I'll administer the form of oathor, if you prefer it, you shall be at liberty to take all that trouble. Besides, I am to affirm. Perhaps it will be sufficient for us to bind ourselves by our honor as gentlemen."

The smoking room was now all but deserted, the members of the club who had been dining there having gone away, while those who were spending the evening at theatres or parties had not yet come in. In one of the far corners a fat man, with his hat tilted over his eyes, was slumbering stertorously; a little nearer another was nodding over the evening paper.

"I think," said Lord Guise, "that we may proceed to business without fear of being betraved."

Accordingly the four men drew their chairs close together and each in turn solemnly repeated the following formula:

"I promise upon my honor as a gentleman that if from this day forth I should at any time form the intention of asking a lady to become my wife I will at once call a meeting of this society to consider my intention, and make such inquiries as may be thought necessary. I also promise upon my honor as a gentleman that in the event of a majority of the society deciding against the lady in question I wili abstain for the space of six clear calendar months from the date of such decision from holding any

It occupies a place between that of the hurried daily paper and that of the less tirrely monthly magazine. It includes both literature and news, and presents with equal force and felicity the real events of current history and the imaginative themes of fiction. On account of its very complete series of illustrations of the World's Fair, it will be not only the best guide to the great Expention, but also its best souvenir. Every public event of general interest will be fully illustrated in its pages. Its contributions being from the best writers and artists in this country, it will containe to excel in literature, news and illustrations, all other publications, of its class.

AN O'ER TRUETALE. By Our Danville Scribe.

In June, 1891, Nathaniel Hawthorne Gregory became a widower. After an lan must be 'sponsible fur it !" average season of grief he began to go into the world again. He greeted old acquaintances pleasantly, if sadly, and preach and sing. By and by, Nathaniel noticed the frequency with which Kitty Irvine chanced to sit near him. Kitty had a complexion outrivaling that of a that of a lark at dawn. When she joined the rest of the congregation in singing "Nearer my God to Tiee, nearer to she managed to punch him with her elwhen she came to the word "thee." Afconsiderable length of time, Uncle Nathaniel began to glance shyly at his temptress and encountered looks of sympathy which as time flew by on rosy pinions he thought developed into something kinder. After a few awkward atsaw Kitty but what she was accompanied by a dashing young fellow named Andy Harlan. Yet Andy was not an accommodating or selfish. He would man," and Kitty, too, "a chance." And kingdoms per day.

Uncle Nat offered Kitty trinkets of ing on the arm of Mr. Harlan, and offor her to remain out so late.

Nat thought sometimes that he wis ot. He could not understand the Harhim sweeter than a jug of molasses, but then it was "Mr. Harlan, Mr. Harlan, Mr. Harlan!" Finally, in March, of the present year, she agreed to go to meeting at Hustonville in a buggy all alone with Nat, the everlasting Mr. Harlan to be left behind. She kept her promise and off they started in a buggy, for which the stable-keeper required Nat to pay $3 cash in advance.

The day passed pleasantly. Kitty was very agreeable, and as they rode home in the even'tide Nat asked her to marry him. Kit heard him through and then said she would "talk to Mr. Harlan about it." Nat had long wished there were no Mr. Harlan, and when Kitty said this, he felt as though he could massacre everybody of that name. But

This he did, and she told him to go for the license and it was on the 12th day of April, '92 that County Clerk R. S. Nichols issued it. They were married that night at the house of the bride's "ma" (Mr. Harlan being accidentally present at the ceremony), and it was in the midst of the merry-making that, Kitty whispering in Nat's ear, told him that he must go to his own home that night and that she would explain next day why she made so strange a request.

Patient and obedient in all things, Nat sought his lonely house, thinking his bliss could be delayed but a few hours at most. He waited to be sent for next morning, but the summons came not, and when towards night he called at the home of his bride, she told him that he must excuse her, as she was busy getting Mr. Harlan's supper. Nat got mad and began to shower imprecations on Mr. Harlan's head, when that worthy stepped from an adjoining room and buildozed Nat into leaving the premises. Nat went back in a few days, thinking Kitty's peculiar conduct would cease, but she met him at the door and told him he must not come in, as her "ma"

When we people who write about hands. fashion make any unusual effort to be practical we commonly succeed in leav wish to be informed; and so I hesitate about launching into economics, anent bodices and blouses for widowed skirts bereft of their mated waists, and yet 1 saw a tartan silk blouse the other morn ing that would work in handily in almost any young woman's wardrobe. It was at an early committee meeting -how early you do have to begin ir order to sandwich all your philanthropies and your educationalities in-and the young woman who wore it was dark, slin were deep crimson, green, black and a

The gown she wore it with was a fine black cloth with a narrow little black velvet ruche at the bottom, lined with tartan like the blouse, and flaring like all the newest skirts, six or eight yards round on the floor.

In such a costume a girl can't quite dance, but she can do a surprising proportion of all the other nice things of life that really tempt to the doing. A girl can dance and is very wise to dance in such another blouse as a young woman coaxed into life for herself the other day when the purse of pater familias curtly refused to yield up a new evening gown. A function was coming off: a toilet was an imperative necessity and so a scrap of pale gray blue silk, of delightfully soft, rich quality, was laid thought about, dreamed of and prayed over until, by dint of turnings, twist ings and contrivings, inches enough were discovered in it and the odd corners of it for the putting together of a Russian sort of blouse bodice, gathered under a blue velvet belt and laid away in soft folds from the throat with a deep, turnover frill narrowing to the merest thread of a cascade at the waist line. Puffed sleeves were pieced together out of scraps and remainders until they looked properly huge, and the blue ribbons that crossed them near the elbows were conveniently ornamental blinds for some of the seams.

With a huge bunch of winter rose the makeshift bodice was fine enough to stand on its dignity conscious of merit, and the "function" had no prettier girl at it than the one who promenaded on the arm of the handsomest

The blouse skirts are full and means of killing this idiocy of trailing a foot and a half in length, and the blouse belt is a broad band of red and gold galon. There is a galon collar, and the sleeves have gauntlets and above them long puffs broken in halves by galon bands. An odd blouse, though I don't know that I am prepared to go so far as to say that it is an especially pretty one, is a long coat bodice coming almost to the knees and with its full front drawn over and fastened straight up and down down and all around. The Patriarchs' ball takes place Mouday night, and the full corps de ballet ing out just the one point on which you of debutantes will be out with their gowns. Probably the prettiest thing that I have succeeded in getting sight of is a silvery white silk skirt with a bodice of exquisitely fine point de Venice lace laid in a succession of Vs in front and festooned about the low neck opening with a filmy lace flounce, depending from a broad ostrich feather band. Over the bosom and upon the shoulders are silvery ribbon rosettes with long loops and jeweled flowers to hold them. The bodice was sleeveless and curly haired. Her colors, naturally and the skirt edged simply with a white velvet roll.

The mate to this gown-to be worn by the sister of the young woman who ordered it from her own design-is a pale watery green silk Empire frock, dimpling like the sea under sunshine, and sweeping away in a train which once would not have been thought suitable for a girl in her first season. From under each arm starts a band of pearl embroidered silk, the two strips crossing upon the bosom and ending each in a jeweled knot at its destination upon the opposite shoulder. The triangles cut by the bands are filled in with puffs of Italian lace, and a very full frill of the same cobwebby stuff outlines the low pointed bodice neck and stands up in fans against the short puffed sleeves. The end and aim accomplished is a quaint little empire zouave as fetching as you please.

For a young matron is a little white chiffon frock, whose sleeves are puffed from shoulder to wrist; each puft braceleted with a pearl embroidered ribbon. A high belt of white satin crosses the waist in front and lace cascades make a sort of fluffy boa and fall on either side of the loosely hanging draperies.

More novel if not more attractive is a dainty white mousseline dress embroidered with pale blue stars about the hem. The corsage has long puckered sleeves and an embroidered chemisette of muslin. A deep corselet belt of pale blue is fastened with a high silver buckle through which the sash passes. A pale blue ribbon is to be tied about the society bud's yellow curls.

To these I might add for the greater state and splendor of greater years a rich white satin dress embroidered with gold passementerie and arranged with pink velvet sleeves and a plaited collarette of gold embroidered tulle.

I might add also a gown of gray ribbed velvet with bands of sable running round and about the skirt, and with a broad sable stripe framing the white shoulders.

But if I want a word about walking dresses now is the time to be saying it. You may not call white cloth good promenade material in muddy December, and the frock I am telling you about was meant to appear out of doors. It was bordered with marten fur, and it had a changeable velvet bodice, round waisted and fastened with three big antique buttons. Over this it had a marten collar fastened with jetted cords. More bearable from many points of view is a Russian costume of dark green cloth trimmed with sealskin and with cap and muff matching. The skirt is hemmed up with a silk ruche and the jacket bodice has green velvet lapels edged with fur.

More novel is an empire dress of old rose cloth, with a frill of black ruched satin about the bottom. There is a deep rose-colored velvet belt and a full-gathered bodice of green silk tucked under a broad white silk chemisette to which is attached a high rolling white silk collar. Scheduled to go with this toilet is a poke hat of green felt with rose-colored standing plumes.

On Broadway yesterday I happened to see a dark red and black striped velvet gown. The combination is one high in indeed, to go to the office in, if you are favor and in this instance worked most velvet bordered the skirt and the bodice

Five car-loads of mob came to see us again Thursday night. It was reluctantly addressed by Judge Boyd. I lost the opportunity of my life by not getting on a box and saying: "Fellow mobbers!" I should have made a speech that would have awakened the wild, sleeping echoes of the Cumberland river cliffs, which Judge Boyd made a pretty sensible speech, but as a mob has no sense, I would have pleased them much better than Boyd. The mob did not get the prisoner. He had been hid in the Cumberland cliffs and sent to Stanford next day. Several of the mob have been indicted. LIBERTY, CASEY COUNTY.

-At this writing circuit court is stil draggingon, and though many cases are on the docket, but few have been tried. Tae rain, high water and other causes unknown to the writer have interrupted its proceedings. But one criminal case has been tried yet, that of Joe Glisby. Two cases are set far to-morrow, the two Dalks, for killing Pfeminger and and go Hayden for attempted rape. It is in timated that there are new phases in the similar will be noted and reported if they develop into anything worthy of mention. With all the bad weather, there has been a pretty full atwhoop of the red man died away. other distinguished persons from a distendance during the week. Among the tance, we noticed your townsman, J. W. Alcorn, here for a couple of days. Conspicuous among the guests at the Wilkerson Hotel on Friday, we noticed your late correspondent from Hustonville, Dr. J. T. Bohon, whose versatile pen used to enliven the readers of the INTERIOR JOURNAL. And last, though far from beafraid of a mob-when they are not after gifted Capt. Samuel M. Boone, of Somerset, after nearly 30 years of separation. Fifty-four winters have frosted his flowing locks, yet he is the same vivacious spirit of the long ago. He and Dr. Bohon crossed blades in the public room and as the flashes of wit scintillated from the quivering steel, the full house was much edified. Capt. Boone is now playing the role of a traveling salesman for the Central Cider Co., of Somerset. Whatever part the captain takes in the great drama of life, whether it be an Irish dirtshoveler, a Yankee clock fixer, a ballad singer, an auctioneer or popular lecturer before a fashionable audience, he always makes a star actor; for we have known him to perform in all those characters and more besides.
